Students Role in Developing Nation

'No country can really develop, unless its citizens are educated.'

The role of students in developing a country is huge. You can't expect a country to develop if it doesn't have literate people. These students who are studying would be working tomorrow. They would be working for the public, private sector etc. These students would be the pillars the country would be standing on. If these students leave their studies or are not given a chance to move ahead then they won't be able to help their country and its economy.

There are students who receive some of their education in their home country and then go abroad to get a higher degree. There is nothing wrong with that either because they can then come back to their country and serve it with the great level of knowledge they have.

Therefore the role of the students can become important even before they have jumped into the real world. A vibrant, aggressive and ill-mannered student community can bring a bad name to the country and may eventually harm the process of development as investors would be unsure of their future. However a disciplined, smart, creative student community can show the world of their countries ability to develop and their hunger to achieve the best.

The students today would be the teachers of tomorrow. They will be giving their country back whatever their country has given them. This is how a country develops and this is how many developing nations in the world have become fully developed.

As an educational institutions, as parents or as a society it is our moral responsibility to groom our children in right manner and to lay a proper and firm foundation of the world as a nation.
